The Imagination Of God

Think about God for a moment.
He has always existed. He is the Alpha and Omega, the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End. Through him, all things are possible. God is perfect in love, wisdom, and knowledge. God's perfect loving thoughts, his consciousness, are pure through his love, wisdom, and knowledge. What can God manifest or create unless it first comes from his conscious thoughts, his spirit, his Holy Spirit?
God's conscious thoughts are his life, but has not yet "created" his ideas and plan that become his reality. What does he think? His conscience has this plan of creation, where all things are possible, and that his eternal plan of creation never ends. Not only does it ever end, it's perfect. God then thinks.....how can I feel great love not simply just for his self, but through all the conscious thoughts based upon love from creation and his perfect plan? Why not live life-love through endless experiences where his plan for creation can freely reciprocate love?
So this plan of God for creation where his consciousness, his thoughts, actually become manifested into his reality. Not just living souls, but all of creation because his consciousness flows through every thing. God does not separate anything from his self because all is One.
The plan is so beautiful in that he has taken from within his own self, created life that has its own consciousness, but yet his consciousness flows through his creation because his creation is perfect, and again, all one. There can be no idea or experience left out because everything is possible, and God-creation are eternal.
Now the perfectly created spirits of his creation have absolute free will. Creation now thinking, on its own, from God's manifestation. The spirit-soul is not programmed. It has the ability to "create" being its own "god", manifesting duality. Duality being positive-negative. Duality with freedom to balance life to work towards the greater goodness of creation through absolute free will, however the soul chooses.
The conscience thoughts of that soul may or may not be made manifest through the mind of each soul's individual spiritual souls makeup. Either way, the soul eternally lives through his love, by way of life experiences. It is then the spirit-soul lives eternally from each of its own individual manifestations of life growing more and more from the spirit of love in which it was created being the image and likeness of their Creator, God where it is said that all flesh shall see the salvation of God.
The perfectly created spirit now in reality, has the ability to live from the created spirit, or the "mind" balancing duality necessary for unconditional free will. So it is then the spirit-soul that determines from the mind how much separation it chooses to be from the One.
When the understanding that life is living from love, and all of creation is one, is it not just a matter of "time" when the ETERNAL spirit-soul comes to understand his wisdom?
